DR. DILLON'S ARTICLE Confusion Over Europe's Needs of Food

By Dr. E. J. Dillon, one of the world's greatest journalists, will report the proceedings upon which the eyes of the world are now centered, for New England readers consistently through the columns of the Boston American. Dr. Dillon will write upon the preliminaries leading up to the main Peace Conference and upon the Versailles assembly both.

Paris, Jan. 4.—The food situation in Central Europe is imperiously understood for a lack of trustworthy data. About the nature of the distress in Austria there is no doubt. Germany may possibly be somewhat better off, but there, too, the pinch of hunger will, it is calculated, be felt by March.

COLUMBIA THEATRE

Two excellent full-photoplay bills are announced for the week at Loew's Columbia Theatre. For the first half here will be eight scenes of "The Klondike" with an all-star cast pictured in a stirring story of the Alaskan gold country. The second half will feature a screen of the sentimentals who dallies with men's hearts, but in a crisis reveals a heart as big as all women. The other photoplay will be a "The Name," a charming comedy of society with dainty Constance Talmadge in leading part.

THE "BEAR LEADERS," an English farce very well played, con-as a pleasure purveyor. Two of the most feminine screen stars, and comedy star, head their productions. The first Boston showings will be next Monday evening. The proceeds of the concert go to the Jewish war relief. He will play an attractive program.

MODERN THEATRE.

Pauline Frederick and Tom Moore head their respective photoplays which will be given their first Boston showings throughout the week at the Modern Theatre, thus promising variety through the differing quality of the new motion pictures. Miss Frederick's photoplay is entitled "Out of the Shadow," and is a picturing of the story by E. W. Hornum. "The Shadow of the Rose," Vivian Moore's dramatic as all of Mr. Hornum's stories are, this concerns the wife of a man who is sentenced for a crime which, circumstances, together with his later release, serve to regenerate and bring the useful parasite, the woman who has led a butterfly existence without care for the nation's side of life. It is promised that the role is one which will draw from the star's best gifts of emotional acting. Mrs. Moore's photoplay is entitled "The West, Young Man."

BEACON THEATRE.

Stirring drama and comedy will have equal part in the bill of new photoplays which will constitute the program at the Beacon Theatre, when the picture, introduced throughout the week, Pauline Frederick, mistress of the emotional acting arts, will be seen in a screening of a popular story by the English author, E. W. Hornum, "Out of the Shadow," in which the central figure is a wife who has lived only for the pleasure and thrillless pursuit which her husband's wealth has allowed. The other photoplay will be "The West, Young Man," picturing Tom Moore as a dissolute young Easterner who goes to the West and there on a ranch makes adventures.

BOSTON THEATRE
"Shades" featuring Isabel Normand, to be shown as the feature picture at the Boston Theatre, the coming week is filled with unexpected situations. The vaudeville bill, which includes the rest of the bill, is featured by J. C. Mack and company with the latest dancing act, Mack and Voltaire, Frank Brown, and Harding, the singing "O'Malley" and China and Co.

COMING
"The story of the Rosary," a powerful English melodrama by Walter Howard, which has had great success both in England and in this country, will be acted for the first time in Boston at the Castle Square Theatre during the week of January 11. It is filled with many sensational situations and an abundance of comedy.

This Day in History

THIS is the anniversary of the introduction into Europe in 536 A. D. of silk manufacture. The art, which had long flourished in the Orient, was brought to the West by monks, who had learned it in Constantinople. It received great elaboration through the Middle Ages.

The Man Who Lost Himself

Absorbing and Humorous Tale of a Philadelphia Business Man Who Had a Title Thrust Upon Him in London

By H. De Vere Stacpole

UP to this Rochester had appeared to him mad, crazy, irresponsible, but up to this time he had not clearly seen the vitality of Rochester. The woman saved it. Rochester had picked up a stranger, because of the mutual likeness, and sent him home to play his part, perhaps to die, to have a ghostly bit at his family. What about his wife, he had never thought of her, or he had not cared.

"And such a wife!" "That fellow ought to be dug up and cremated," said Jones to himself as he opened the door with his latch key. "He must, sure. Well, I hope I'll cremate him tonight tomorrow."

Having smoked a cigar he went upstairs and to bed.

He had been trying to think of how he would open the business on the morrow, of what he would do to start with—then he gave up the attempt, determining to leave everything to the inspiration of the gods.

CHAPTER XX.

The Family Council

HE arrived at Curzon street at fifteen minutes after nine next morning and was shown up to a drawing-room by the butler. Here he took his seat and waited the coming of the family, much himself as he could be looking round at the furniture and pictures hanging in the salons of the house and the street outside.

He heard that, from the faint rumble of wheels, voices.

Now he heard someone coming up the stairs outside, a servant probably, for the sound subdued and was followed by a high note of the stairs and men exchanging words.

Some could not make any of that terrible family in the hall, the stairs lit up, the door opened and the Duke of Melford entered. He was in light frock coat and a white waistcoat, he held a morning paper under his arm and was looking at it.

"Morning," said his grace, walking to a chair and facing his seat. "The women will be up in a minute. They need not wait."

"The women will be up in a minute," said his grace, walking to a chair and facing his seat. "The women will be up in a minute. They need not wait."

Parisian in Every Line

Is This Unique Gown From the French Capital

Parisian in every detail is this smart gown of beige tricotage. The underskirt is fashioned with two box pleats on either side while the waist and panels are formed of one piece of material which is edged by three rows of stitching. The small turban of old blue velvet has a band of Persian lamb and a long feather as trimming.

Prospects of Palestine

PALESTINE has never had a well-defined boundary except the sea on its west, but it is understood to be about 10,000 miles in extent. Much of this area is too dry and rocky for tillage; large parts are too dry even for cattle or sheep.

SOMEHOW or other Charles Taylor had begun to lose his head. He had been told in a letter that he had been "fired" by "Staple" Hatcher's first wife. He did not trouble to try to explain this change in his attitude—

"But," answered Taylor, "I've been told that I've been fired."

"Where to?" asked the judge. "I don't think you can get away."

"You must, well I ought to get away from here," answered Taylor. "I don't want to be in the griddance too long—I want a rest—besides it's getting warmer and a little rain would do us all good."

"There are trips and trips," replied the judge warmly.

"I don't know," answered Taylor. "I don't want to be in the griddance too long—I want a rest—besides it's getting warmer and a little rain would do us all good."

"There are trips and trips," replied the judge warmly.

"I don't know," answered Taylor. "I don't want to be in the griddance too long—I want a rest—besides it's getting warmer and a little rain would do us all good."
